

The New York Judicial Institute, Pace University Law School • White Plains, NY

The New York State Judicial Institute is a three-story 28,000 square foot training center for Unified Court System judges and staff. The Institute is the first of its kind in the nation providing continuing education and professional training for a state judicial system. The centerpiece of the facility is a 160-seat stepped auditorium with a dais stage for training and Moot Court sessions. The main training room designed as a Moot Courtroom is equipped with advanced teleconferencing capabilities to broadcast training sessions to other locations within the building as well as other court facilities throughout the States. Other major elements include a multi-use dining room, three break-out rooms for large group training, two conference rooms, a business center, a law library, telecommunications linked to the Pace University Law School, and the statewide Unified Court System.

A prominent entrance uses a curving wall and cylinder-shaped atrium that reaches upward and fills the main entrance hall with natural light. The cylinder creates bright, airy conference areas inside the building with natural light and views of the campus. The curving surfaces aid in the flow of the building and make it seem larger. Sustainable lighting design was achieved with extensive daylighting and efficient fixtures. North-facing window curtain walls allow light to fill stairwells, breakout rooms, and sitting areas eliminating the need for artificial lighting during the day. The end product is a building that is functional, beautiful, and appropriate for the site.
